ABSTRACT

An improved technique of interfacing with databases and other information sources is disclosed. A set of transaction switches evaluates particular transactions to determine the type, quantity, and other parameters associated with information access. The transaction switches then 5   spread the transactions across multiple transaction engines, in a manner such that equal processing load is placed upon the transaction engines. The transaction engines then interface directly with information sources, such as databases.